

LITTLE PRINCE LIFE-STRATEGY

Happy, valuable, enjoyable life amidst a global crisis?

Some elements of human life burden the Earth (we call these roots), others do not burden it (we call these fruits).

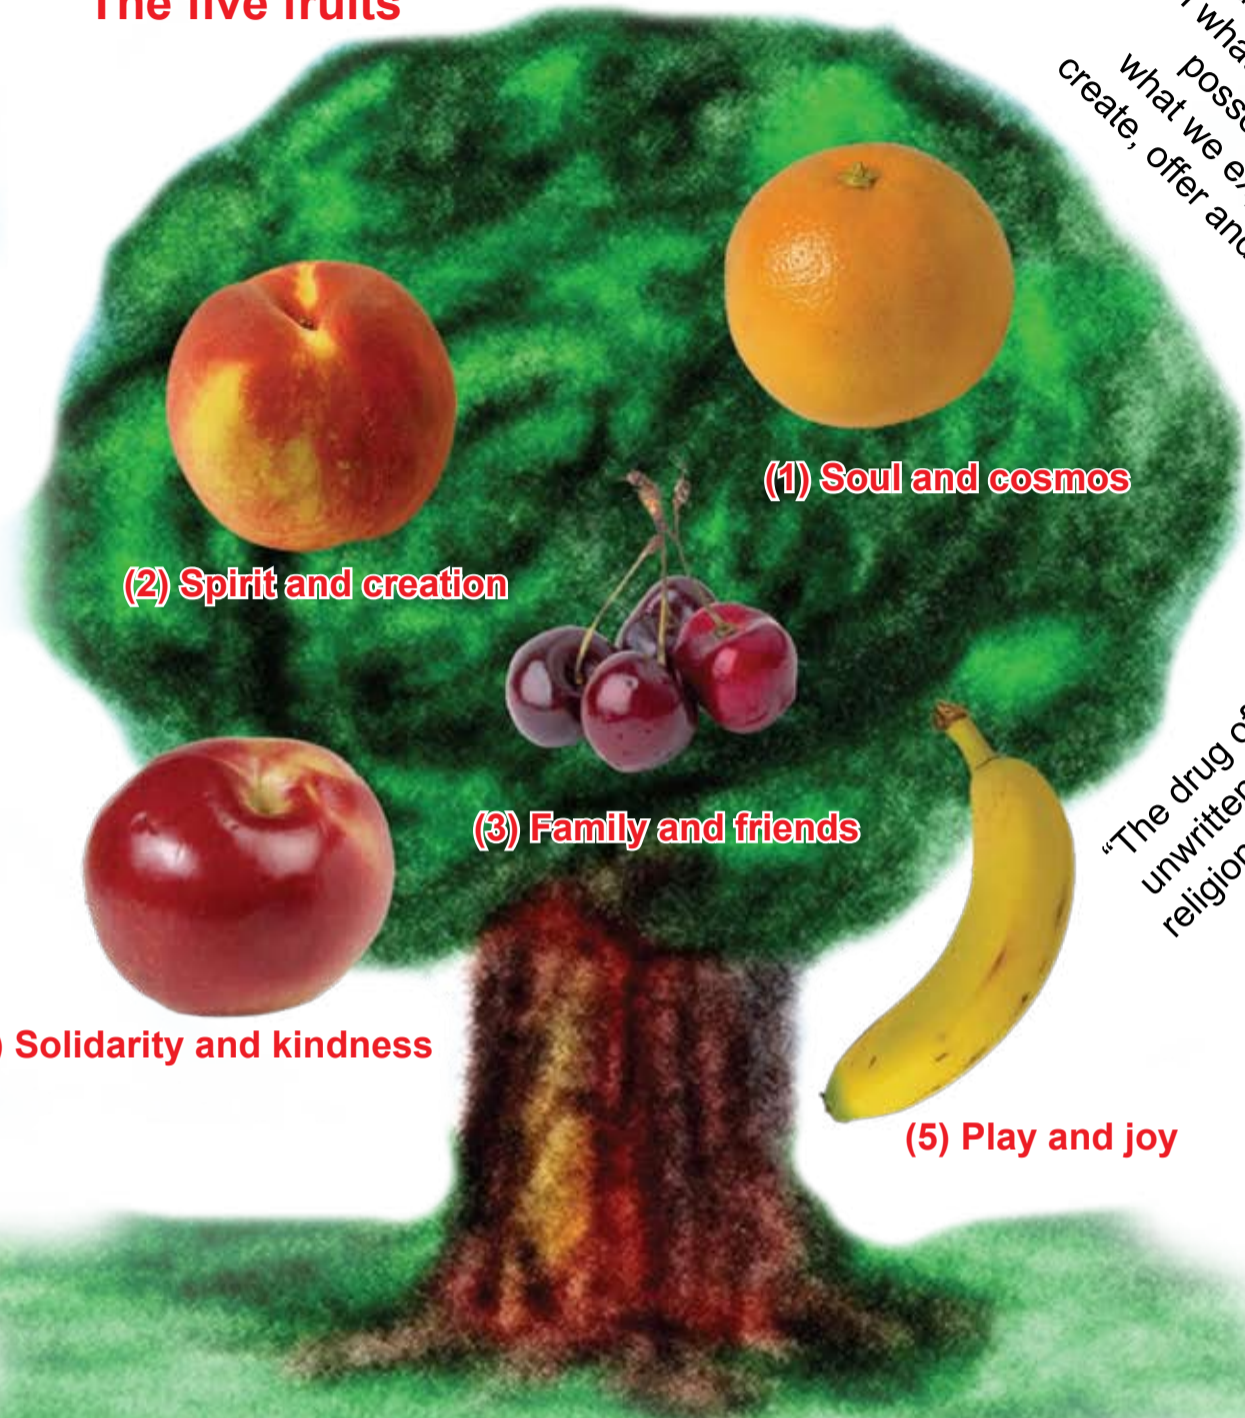

The roots are necessary, but they have to be treated very-very carefully, as they burden the Earth - like the planet of the Little Prince crumbled by the roots of the baobabs. They take away our time, money and heart and the essentials got lost.

The fruits give the essence and goal of human life and happiness. As they do not burden the Earth, infinitely progress is possible on these areas:

It is worthy monitoring our development in the following non-material treasures:

- Love, passion, amazement ...
- Family, parents, children, grandchildren
- Conversation, guest, friend, community ...
- Activity for peace, Earth, justice ...
- Intellectual progress, students, mentors ...
- Helping ones in need, prevention ...
- Apologizing, forgiving, patience ...
- Play games, dance, song, fun, joy ...
- Silence, deep & uplifting spiritual experience
- Nature, scents, landscapes, plants, animals
- Sky, clouds, birds, stars ...
- Hikes, village, town, museum ...
- Music, film, theatre, arts ...
- Book, poem, picture, heureka, wisdom ...
- Creation, ability, the joy of work ...
- Sports, cleanness, health ...

The five fruits

(2) Spirit and creation

(1) Soul and cosmos

(3) Family and friends

(4) Solidarity and kindness

(5) Play and joy

Our values do not lie in what we consume or possess, but in what we experience, create, offer and develop.

"The drug of growth" is an unwritten and unadmitted religion of our time. (Denes Gabor)

(1) "I will grow infinitely. To be limited is bad. Maybe I will trample and destroy the Garden. Maybe my descendants will swarm on the Earth like locusts, until they drown in their own filth and overcrowdedness drives them mad. Still they must continue, because growing infinitely is good, while accepting the limits of law is bad." (Daniel Quinn: Ishmael)

The five roots

(1) reproduction

(2) production (3) consumption (4) pollution

(5) fight

(2) "Do not be rash. The profit of your work goes to others." (Attila József)
As people we suffer from what we caused as workers.

(3) Consumption means that advertisements make you spend your money, earned with hard work, on junk and dependence (glass beads and fiery water).

(4) What makes man filthy is not what he is flooded by from outside, but what he himself causes. (cf. Mt 15,11)

(5) "Destroy everything that eats what you eat. ... The more rivals you destroy, the more you can propagate your own race. Thus destruction becomes the most sacred of all professions." (Quinn: Ishmael)

Be a gardener of your own personality - improve it!

A wine-taster takes delight in wine's light, swinging and fragrance. He drinks little but finds much pleasure in it, and does no harm to himself or to others. An alcoholic (a dependent consumer) drinks lots but does not enjoy it and does much harm.

Non-material richness fulfills life. "I am thirsty for this water ... It was born from the walk under the stars, the singing of the pulley and the effort of my arms. It was good for the heart, like a gift."

Every living being is doomed to die. What matters is, whether he developed anything imperishable within himself during his lifetime. Fear of death motivates oversecuring the roots described above. If you realize in yourself, what deserves immortality, you can concentrate more on the fruits - the development of your eternal values - rather than on the roots.

Everyone has the right to be educated about the challenges of globalization!
